Apart from the technically excellent skills one looks for in an architect, the Kerns Group takes personal interest in the project and the people affected by the work. This extends beyond boardroom meetings and includes everyone inconvenienced by the project and all who will benefit from the end result.

At every turn, they are considerate and at every obstacle, they are creative and persistent. Being a church in Old Town, any addition or renovation is governed by the approval of the B.A.R. (Board of Architectural Review) which can make for tedious and protracted discussions. Kerns Group has shown they know how to be both diplomatic and effective in these conversations and their way of handling such negotiations is exemplary.
